Herbert Putnam, librarian of congress, opens the February Atlantic with a striking and valuable article upon the library, seecting its history, its strength and effective, James Ford Rhodes contributes his recent address on "History," in which he points cut that the great classical writers, Herodotus, Thucydides and Tacitus have never been equaled by modern writers, with the possible exception of Gibbon. Gerald Stanley Lee in "Journalism as a Pasis for Literature," calls attention to the compute with which newspapers and newspaper writers are generally regarded, but affirms that from them is yet to spring the literature of the future at the hands of men who shall develop the self-respect of the press, and establish literature, not by denying the newspapers by raising it to its highest power. Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly very appropriately devotes quite a corner of its February number to reminiscences of George Washington, and the illustrations are probably as fine as were ever printed in connection with biographical notes on the farther of his country. It likewise contains a charming story by Bret Harte, a railroad sketch by R. C. Jackson, army articles by General Miles and numerous contributions and drawings bearing on the war in Africa.

You always expect to see Ainslee's Magazine for February is lation to our colonies. Theodore Roosevelt's second chapter on the career of Cromwell deals with the "Long Parliament and the Civil War." The opening installment of "Tommy and Grizze!" Mr. Barrie's great serial, has been received with enthusiastic praise. A brilliant essay on Chopin as a psychologist and poor by James Huncker, an art erticle by Frederic Crowminshield, and an illustrated poem by Oliver Herford complete the number.

Herbert Putmam, librarian of congress, opens the February Atlantic with a striking and valuable article upon the library, sketching its history, its strength and weakness, and showing what it it needs to make it truly national and effective, James Ford Rhodes contributes his recent address on "History," in which he points out that the great classical writers, Herodous, Thucydides and Tacitus have never of McChure's Magazina of McChure's McChure's Magazina of McCh a baby plump and rosy, don't you? The publishers of McClure's Magazine say that nothing they have ever brought out has attracted such wide attention and such hearty commendation as "The Life of the Master." by Dr. John Watson. A second installment appears in the February number with live illustrations in color and many in black and white, all from special paintings and drawings by C. K. Linson. "General Grant's Administration from the Standpoint of a Member of His Cabinet" is a contribution that affords much new light on a number of interesting figures and questions in recent political history. It is another chapter from the personal recollections of the Hon. George S. Boutwell. Waiter Wellman relates the story of some of his hard experiences and strange adventures in the course of his last year's arctic expedition. The English author, Mr. Tighe Hopkins, begins his novel, and indeed unique series of stories with the February number. They are stories depicting prison life.
